

Tuesday June 6
Class Log

Daily Log

May 18, 2008 Midlands Writing Project

Created by Jennifer Clytus and Kelli Edwards

What Happened Today

• Snack Time

Discussed the writing Log - Work collaboratively to write, edit, and copy the log.

Last session highlights

- We need to all check the Midlands Writing Project website.

Read-Aloud at the beginning of class: You Have to Write
By Janet S. Wong

- Read-Aloud "About Notebooks" Poem By Jean Little

Reflections

- Those cheesy snacks were really good!

Kelli and Jennifer are first, that's us. We hope we do it right, like Kentucky Fried Chicken. Boy that was corny!

Double Entry Journal Form discussions are today.

- The site offers lots of valuable information and will help us keep up with what is going on in the Midlands Writing Project.

I really liked the idea that we get to choose a book that speaks to us and we feel will also speak to others. You Have to write really captures the process of writing through student experiences in the classroom. It also shows how a student finds his voice through writing. Isn't that what writing is all about!!!

Daily Log

May 16, 2006

Midlands Writing Project

Created by Jennifer Clytus and Kelli Edwards

What Happened Today

- James Dickey's Words of Wisdom - A writer is someone who notices and is enormously taken by things that other people walk right by.
- Discussed Writing Prompts- We will do lots of writing prompts. We will need to a writing prompt or read-aloud. It's time to see which one we all will do.
- Recognizing that the Writing project has predictable structures.
- Now we get to set up the workshop schedule. All of us will present.

Reflections

- This is so true. Who would have thought that when children notice everything and ask what is that? Why? and how? That they were becoming writer's.
- Start thinking now!
Did you hear? Writing prompts can be done with anything shoes, dresses, non-print items. This broadens our choices.
- This is all so important when teaching writing in the writer's workshop to your students.
- Come on let's volunteer who will go first. How about second.